Title of Proposed Project:

Global Brooklyn Research Project

Brief Abstract

While it is the fourth biggest city in the United States, Brooklyn is experiencing both the benefits and limitations of its experience as a world city. While urban spaces are thought to magnify the democratic possibilities, their development tends to expand social inequalities. Yet, the people of Brooklyn have long resisted elements of the homogenization steamroller. While many revel in the borough’s vast cultural history, others lament patterns of displacement, pollution, and environmental disrepair which follow patterns of uneven urban development. Throughout Brooklyn, regular people are fighting off negative dynamics of the globalization experience, including speculative gentrification, displacement, and police brutality. The battle over these transformations is a struggle over the contested nature of globalization in Brooklyn. The Global Brooklyn Research Project focuses urgently needed attention to the transforming periphery of this global city. Global Brooklyn is a first-of-its-kind study of the contestation of this space.
