General Description

---

Position in Occupational Medicine, City University of New York

The Barry Commoner Center for Health and the Environment (BCCHE) at Queens College, CUNY, seeks a trained occupational medicine physician or other physician with equivalent experience to serve as Medical Director of an established national occupational medicine screening program at a university-based occupational and environmental health research institute. This unique program screens retired nuclear weapons workers and has included lung cancer screening for two decades. Tasks include directing all medical aspects of the program; overseeing program staff; ensuring quality of program procedures and outputs; maintaining relationships with unions, subcontractors and external organizations, including the funding agency; and conducting research within the screening program. Ample opportunity and time to perform research is available.

The Barry Commoner Center for Health and the Environment is an environmental and occupational health research institute at Queens College, City University of New York, the nation's largest public university. The mission of the Center is to identify and help rectify environmental and occupational threats to human health (<http://commonercenter.org/index.html>). Areas of current research include air pollution, immigrant and occupational health, lung cancer screening, and World Trade Center health effects.

CUNY is an equal opportunity employer and seeks diversity in its faculty and staff.

Other Duties

The opportunity to spend part-time in an occupational medicine clinic may be possible, if desired. BCCHE is located in mid-Queens on the campus of Queens College.

Qualifications

Candidates should be physicians who are board-certified or board-eligible in occupational medicine or other specialty with equivalent occupational health experience. Clinical and public health expertise is required. The successful candidate will work directly with long-time Commoner Center Director, Dr. Steven Markowitz.
